Thoughts Behind the Creation of The Susan C. Murray Memorial Women's Scholarship Program

While they may not have known her name, most railroaders and rail suppliers from the many industry trade shows she ran and attended happily recognized Susan C. Murray's face. When she passed away in January of 2003, her official title was Vice President, Directories for Commonwealth Business Media, but for those who knew her best and had the good fortune of working with her, she was best known as: friend, valued colleague, professional mentor, leader and role model.

Susan C. Murray began her distinguished career with International Trade Exhibits in France as the company's Public Relations and Marketing Manager. She spent 10 years there building a solid foundation before joining International Thomson Transport Press (predecessor to PRIMEDIA Directories/Commonwealth Business Media) in 1984.

At Thomson Transport Press, Susan's star had only begun to rise, as she would hold a variety of marketing and executive posts during her tenure. She would soon be credited with conceiving and creating the company's Specialty Publishing Group. Under Murray's direction, the group launched two trade shows, including the ASLRRRA (American Short Line and Regional Railroad Association) Annual Meeting and Exhibition, and published numerous conference programs on behalf of the transportation industry's leading trade associations.

In her final post, she managed Commonwealth Business Media's Directory Division, including 13 titles in various fields including rail transportation, international trade, classical music and commercial credit, as well as the company's conference department.

As a manager, Susan Murray led by example. One of the keys to her success—something she employed throughout all aspects of her life—was balance. With grace and aptitude, she successfully struck a balance between a full personal life and an often-hectic professional life. In business, she combined a guiding philosophy with firm direction. Susan understood the importance of hard work, and also play. She tackled new challenges with determination and a jovial nature. In life she mastered equilibrium—something many professional women struggle each day to achieve.

To celebrate Susan C. Murray's life and incredible success, Commonwealth Business Media, Inc. has created this memorial scholarship fund. It is our hope that this scholarship will assist the daughters and granddaughters of railroad industry professionals to pursue and realize universal dreams of success in the professions of their choosing.

In this way, as in so many others, Susan's mentoring touch will live on for many years to come.
